

Chapter VI. Practise Dharma!

The principles of dharmā will not change to suit the convenience of people. Dharma is immutable. Dharma persists as dharmā then, now, and forever. Of course, the practices and rules of applied dharmā might change according to changing causes; but even then, the practices have to be tested on the basis of the scriptures (sastras), not on the basis of advantage. There should be no such calculation. The scriptures may not always support rules that yield tangible visible advantage, nor can the Vedas etc. be expected to indicate only such acts. Dharma cannot be tested on those lines; direct or ocular proof is impossible. Mimamsakas state that dharmā can be known only through the Vedic mantras and that the Vedas attempt to elucidate only truths that are beyond ocular demonstration.

If dharmā is followed with an eye on the consequences, it might even be neglected when the advantage is not patent or immediate. Everyone will not have the same motive or the same standard. For example, each will have a different idea of the fruits of bathing, morning and evening prayers, repetition of the name, and meditation, which are prescribed. Some people cancel repeating the Gayatri in the evenings and instead recite the thousand names (sahasranama) of Siva or Vishnu. “Perform morning and evening prayers at the proper time (kaale sandhyaa samaachareth); that is the prescription.” But, in spite of such directions, is it not a breach of dharmā to cancel the evening prayers like this? Similarly there are prescriptions for every caste.

I created the four castes (varnas), dividing them on the basis of quality and activities.

Chaathurvarnyam mayaa shrishtham guna karma Vibhaagashah

says the Gita. The meaning is quite clear; that is the teaching. But, relying on all kinds of paltry arguments and dry reasonings, many follow the dharmā that appeals to them and, without any fear of God or sin, also drag the innocent and ignorant onto the wrong path.

The protection of dharma

The Lord comes down now and then to uplift the downtrodden and to reestablish dharmā. This is the reason for the incarnation of the Lord, as has been said in ringing tones in the Gita.

I create myself for the establishment of dharmā in every age.

Here, one point has to be clearly grasped. Many who read the Gita take it that the Lord incarnates when dharmā is destroyed and when the forces of a-dharmā begin to prevail. But there is no basis to draw the conclusion that dharmā gets destroyed. The Gita does not say so. The word used is diminish (glaani); that is to say, when the indications are that dharmā is in danger, “I will come in order to protect dharmā from harm.” He did not say that He will come down to protect it and preserve it after dharmā has been destroyed! Of what use is a doctor after life has left? So too, after dharmā, the very life-breath of humanity, has been destroyed, what is the need for the incarnation of the Lord (Bhavarogavaidya)? What is the Lord to protect? This is why the word decline is used to indicate not the destruction but the decline and weakening of dharmā. The protection of dharmā is the task of the Lord, for dharmā is the very breath of the soul (jivi).

Falling into a-dharma

Dharma is not an ordinary affair. One who does not practise dharmā is as bad as dead; one who practises it is of the divine nature. Now, there is need to turn people onto the dharmic path by means of the traditional methods of good advice, tempting them with the attractive consequences of following the path, threatening to dissociate from those who do not, and inflicting punishment as a last resort (traditional methods of sama, dhaana, bheda, and danda). In ancient times, people never gave up the practice of dharmā, even when threatened with death at the point of the sword. Now, without even the slightest pressure from others, people slide down and fall into a-dharma. Indeed, dharmā is interpreted in various confusing ways, and those who strictly follow the real dharmā are obstructed, laughed at, and treated as worse than dried-up grass. Those who anxiously adhere to dharmā are branded as cheats, hypocrites, and ignoramuses. Such calumnators do not know what dharmā is or what its principles are. Unfortunate individuals! They have no capacity to grasp the meaning of that word.

You can judge for yourself how dharmā can be understood by people who do not know even the literal meaning of the word. What can people born blind know of the sun or its rays? Of course, they can feel the heat when the rays of the sun fall on their bodies, but they can't have an idea of the nature of sun, its form, its shape, its brilliance, etc. So too, for a person who has no conception of dharmā, who has no faith in dharmā, the joy derived by its observance is incomprehensible. To dilate on dharmā before such people is as useless a venture as blowing a conch before people who are stone-deaf. They can only see the conch at the lips of the person blowing it, but they can't hear the least bit of sound. So, when dharmā is taught to people or extolled, care must be taken to see that they have the faith, earnestness, and eagerness to practise it. Only such must be handled and sought to be corrected. Later, by the promptings of their own experience and the joy they derive therefrom, even the ignorant will plant the seedlings of dharmā in their hearts.

Nowadays, many educated persons immersed in Vedic and scriptural (sastric) knowledge and classic scholarship have lost faith in the texts of which they are masters. They have become afraid to stick firmly to dharmā, for it is laughed at by their cynical friends, They have yielded to the crooked arguments of critics and sold their heritage for trivial returns. They interpret the fast on the eleventh day of the lunar month (Ekadasi) as one of the means for regulating health, the waving of the camphor flame as a remedy for asthmatics, breathing exercises (pranayama) as helping digestion, pilgrimages as educational tours, and charity as a means of self-advertisement, thus demeaning and desecrating the holy injunctions of dharmā.

Such people only deceive the world; they are barbarians who do not know or heed the principles of dharmā. They can learn something from a perusal of Manu's text on dharmā.

Anyone who wants to know dharmā can know it only by following a system of logic (tarka) that is not opposed to Veda and the scriptures.

Aarsham dharmopadsham cha

Vedashaasthra a-virodhina

Yastharkena anusandhaththe

Sa dharmam veda, netarah

Thus said Manu: No conclusion opposed to Veda can be logical. Dry logic is profitless, and Manu does not recommend it to those who want to study the Vedas, etc. Still, many today stick to this logical reasoning and follow a-dharma themselves, dragging others with them into the wrong path. That is why Veda Vyasa declared long ago:

Those who follow the path of causalism and logic, seeking cause-and-effect connection, will not offer sacrifices in the sacred fire but will involve themselves in low demeaning acts.

Na yakshanthi, na hoshyanthi, hethuvadha vimohithah

Neechakarma karishyanthi, hethuvadha vimohithah

Veda Vyasa said this in Aranyaparva of the Mahabharatha, while describing the conditions that are to be expected in this age (the Kali-yuga).

Follow dharma, as do the elements

Only by following the path of dharma or rectitude do the sun and moon revolve unerringly in their orbits. Only the call of dharma makes all divine powers adhere to their various duties and responsibilities. Only dharma keeps the five elements bound to the principles of their nature.

You should derive the greatest possible benefit from dharma and, while following it, avoid causing any injury to yourselves or others. You must spread the glory of dharma by making yourself a shining example of the peace and joy it gives. Do not follow the trail of dry logic; do not confuse your brain by cynicism and prejudice; do not get interested in what others do or believe in and try to reform them or correct their footsteps. Have faith in the basic Atma, which is your real truth; test all lines of conduct on that basis, whether it will hinder the process of revealing the Atma or not. In the light of that faith and that test, carry on your daily duties and rites. Then, you will never fall into error. You will also derive great joy.

There are worldly maxims like “being engaged in a profession is the sign of a human (udyogam purushalakshanam)”, or “being engaged in a task is the sign of a human (karmam purushalakshanam).” But the real maxim is, “Observance of dharma is the sign of a human (dharmam purushalakshanam).” Everyone must engage in tasks infused with dharma, while putting into action the four goals of human life (purusha-arthas): dharma, wealth (artha), desire (kama), and liberation (moksha).

Dharma for men

Just as faithfulness to the husband (pathivratha-dharma) is for women, celibacy (brahmacharya) is for men. Just as woman should consider one person and one person only as her master and husband, man too has to be faithful to one woman and one woman only, as his mate, his wife. She has to consider the husband as God and worship him and minister to and follow his desires for the fulfilment of her duty of loyalty to the husband (pathivratha); so too, man should honour his wife as the “mistress of the home” and act in accordance with her wishes, for she is the Lakshmi of the home (Grihalakshmi). Then only can he deserve the status of “man”.

Name and fame, honour and dishonour, vice and wickedness, good and bad are all equal and uniform for both men and women. There is no such thing as woman alone being bound and men being free; both are equally bound by the rules of dharma. Both will fall into a-dharma if they behave without consideration of the claims of the four pairs of attributes mentioned above. Men are bound in certain matters, just as women are; men have no right to do certain things. There are some important pledges between the husband and the wife.
